Monologue:

“Ladies and gentlemen, we’ve all seen the reports of the inevitable upcoming zombie apocalypse. It’s only a matter of time folks now I know what you’re thinking: “there’s no such thing as zombies. They’re figments of your imagination like werewolves and vampires, and sober Irish Irishman!” But if that were true then why is the government spending 10 million dollars preparing for it? And do you really think our own federal government would squander hard-earned tax dollars from all of you loyal citizens without a very good reason? Exactly! I don’t think it’s possible that the government would ever waste money. Now as I was saying - we’re here to present a public service to you, the audience. How to survive when civilization collapses and the animated corpses of your neighbors try to hunt you down and devour your sweet. warm. LIVING FLESH! you know it makes a great gift for Christmas! Where are these zombies coming from anyway? TWO WORDS! Global. Warming.”

Play Synopsis:

As you can probably tell by the name, the show is a lighthearted comedy in which two “zombie survival experts” inform the audience on how to fend off the zombie horde.
